SYNOPSIS

The kingdom of Serenia was as unsettled as the German war debt, and had more revolutions than a Ferris wheel. King August, first, who had stolen the kingdom from Princess Lucille, and held her in exile, wished he could give the kingdom back to the late king. General Alarm plots to take the throne from August the first. Count Yourcards, advisor of the old king, intercedes to August in behalf of the Princess and is sent away. Upon his report to the Princess, she decides to see the king herself. The stranger finds himself unable to leave the ship, as his passport has been thrown overboard by a mischievous monkey. A case to be delivered to the king affords a means of his reaching the land. At the castle, he is discovered by the king, who recognizes the likeness of the stranger to himself. Having just received a last warning from the plotters, the king schemes to get away to safety, by changing places with the stranger. This done, the stranger's difficulties begin. The Princess calls, and after her wrath has subsided, the stranger explains how he came to be there. The two plotting factions, General Alarm, and the Prime Minister, who plans to reinstate the Princess, cause a great deal of trouble and excitement, but the stranger stands up against them all, rescues the Princess from General Alarm's gang, and reinstates her to the throne.
